The Missing Ships.

O, thou ever restless sea, "God's haif-attered mystery," e all the shops that sailed so guilantly away ? Teli us, will they never more Furl their wings and come to show? watch and fond hearts wait; precious freight had they,

Precious freight ! ay, wealth untold, More than merchandise or gold, cately wase's bear o'er the heaving main; Human souls are dearer fur Than all earthly treasures are, hem we weep and pray ; must it be in vain? In the silence of the night,

Did they, with a wild affright, hear the cry of Fire ! ccho to the stars ? While the cruel, snake-like flame, Creeping, coiling, hissing came, ck, and up the masts, and out along the spars ! As the doomed ship awayed and tossed Like a mighty holocaust, with despairing crice, lesp into the waves! Or with folded hands, and eyes Lifted to the peaceful skies, o with prayerful hearts to their nameless graves? Did the black wings of the blast Poise and hover over the mast, at in wrath they swept o'er the crowded deck-Leaving not a woul to tell How the long and awful swell ean's troubled breast bore a dismal wreck? Or with shattered hulk and sail,

Riding out the stormy gale, rave ship slowly sink deeper day and night-Drifting, drifting wearily O'er the wide and trackiess sea, es starving, dying there, with no sail in sight? Or when winds and waves were hushed,

While each cheek with joy was flashed, glided gently on, hope in every breast With a sudden leap and shock, Did they strike some hidden rock. down, forever down, to their dreamless rest? Did the strange and spectral fleet Of the icebergs round them meet, closer till they sank crashing to the deep? Do these crystal mountains loom, Monuments of that vast tomb, can's quiet depths where so many sleep ! O, thou ever-surging sea, Vainly do we question thee : waves no answer bring as they kiss the strand

But we know each coral grave, Far beneath the rolling wave, ast give up the dead, touched by God's right hand.
